From the Editor

The elections to the Board of our Society took place last year in November 2022 and I trust you have all received my e-mail notifications. On the front page of this Newsletter you can see the official confirmation of the results and the current composition of the Board. Next elections will be held in 2025, Compumag 2023 Kyoto is just round the corner and I hope to see many members of the Society attending the meeting. It is encouraging to see conferences gradually returning to normal and we expect the number of attendees increasing eventually to the pre-covid levels. Please consult the web pages of the conference for up-to-date information and announcements.

The first conference relevant to our community is CEM in Cannes, France, just after Easter 2023. CEM has introduced over the years many innovative features, including 'scene setting' introductory talks and 'one minute one slide' short presentations preceding the interactive sessions. This year a Doctoral Researcher Workshop will take place and you can read all about this later in the Newsletter.

Two further conference which you may be interested will be held 'back-to-back' in September: ISEF in Pavia, Italy, and OIPE in Graz, Austria. Full information may be found towards the end of the Newsletter.

In 2024 the next IEEE CEFC conference will take place in Jeju, Korea. May I also remind you that Compumag 2025 will be held in Naplex, Italy, while Compumag 2027 in Cancun, Mexico. Full information will be available online nearer the time.

So it looks that we are all going to be very busy!
